HOUSE OF WORSHIP ENTERED BY THIEVES

Two Men Arrested For Pilfering at St. Mary's Church—Confess And May Plead Guilty

St. Mary's Catholic church in this city was entered late Friday afternoon and a stand used as a candle holder and which also contained a box for the deposit of coins was stolen. Two men, Thos. McMullen and John Thompson were arrested in a Brown Street saloon that evening, charged with the theft. They were arraigned before Judge Walker in Municipal court Saturday morning, and their hearing adjourned for one week. One of the men, McMullen, later confessed to the deed and it is believed that both men will plead guilty and receive sentence.

When the janitor visited the church just before six o'clock, Saturday evening, he noticed the candle holder was missing and the candles lay scattered about the floor. Upon being informed of this discovery, Dr. Lienfelder, pastor of St. Mary's church, immediately notified the police.

Chief Straub with Officers O'Malley and O'Brien started out in an effort to gain some clue that would lead to the capture of the guilty ones. They made the rounds of all the saloons and while in the Krantz saloon their suspicions were directed toward two rough appearing strangers who sat at a table in a side room counting money. The money was in small coins, mostly nickels and dimes, such as would be placed in a collection box, and this fact further impressed the officers that the two were the men wanted. The fellows submitted to arrest without a protest and peacefully went with the police to the city jail where they were locked up for the night. After their hearing the next morning the prisoners were transferred to the county jail.

Saturday afternoon, Chief Straub went to the jail and after a long talk with McMullen, the younger of the men, gained from him a complete confession in which he related the story of the robbery. McMullen said that after he and Thompson had removed the stand from the church they carried it to the swamp in the rear of the court house where they broke off the money box. They then hurried to the Northwestern railroad yards where in the shelter of a hand car house they shattered the box thus getting at the contents. It was while in the saloon dividing the spoils that their arrest resulted. McMullen assisted the police in recovering the stand, accompanying Chief Straub to the spot in the swamp where it had been hidden. The stand, which was valued at seventy-five dollars, is badly damaged.

The money found on the men amounted to $6.83. Dr. Lienfelder said that the box had not been emptied for several months and was of the opinion that it contained a much larger sum. It may have been possible that in opening the box some of the money was lost.

McMullen and Thompson are evidently bad citizens, if appearances and actions count for anything, and it is believed by the police, that this is not the first time they have been in trouble. They spent all day Friday in the city and for the most of the time loafed about saloons. In several places they persisted in begging drinks and were ordered out by the bar keepers.

During the day time the side entrance at St. Mary's church is left unlocked. Friday afternoon being very cold and stormy the looters had no difficulty in entering and leaving the building undetected.

PLEAD GUILTY—SENTENCED

McMullen and Thompson appeared before County Judge Billings yesterday afternoon, pleaded guilty to the charge of robbery and house-breaking. They were sentenced to eighteen months in the state prison at Waupun, the first day to be in solitary confinement. The prisoners were taken to the penitentiary this morning by Under-Sheriff Baldwin and Wm. Whipple.

CANDIDATE FOR RE-ELECTION

Nomination papers for Judge A. H. Reid were circulated about the city this week. He will be a candidate for re-election to the office of Judge of the sixteenth Judicial circuit. His present term expires in January, 1910.

MAN AND WIFE IN SUIT

Hazelhurst Couple Engage in Controversy Over Title of Property

According to the Wausau Record-Herald an adjournment of two weeks was taken in the case of Frank Winerman vs. Minnie Winerman, a civil suit which came up before Judge O'Neill in circuit court at that city.

The suit was brought for a judgment to compel the defendant to convey to the plaintiff the title of certain real estate property which was purchased by the plaintiff with the defendant's money, and the title of the property given her as security for a loan, with the understanding that the title was to be conveyed to him as soon as he paid back the loan, according to the complaint. The answer of the defendant is that the property was purchased for her without any such understanding. The loan was $1200.

The litigants are husband and wife and reside in Hazelhurst. The case was instituted in Oneida county and was brought to Wausau because of convenience. H. J. Killelea is attorney for the defendant, and the firm of Smart & Curtis represent the plaintiff.

WOODSMAN ARRESTED ON ROBBERY CHARGE

Alex Dishau Held For Stealing Watch and Rifling Saloon Cash Register at Woodruff

Alex Dishau is a prisoner at the Oneida county jail awaiting trial at the spring term of circuit court on the charge of robbery. He was brought to Rhinelander last Friday by J. H. Bagley, deputy sheriff at Woodruff.

Dishau is alleged to have entered two saloons at Woodruff and while the bar-keepers were asleep, rifled one man of his watch and in the other saloon rifled the contents of the cash register. It is claimed by the proprietor of the place that the register contained about thirty-three dollars. A watch which the prisoner had in his possession was identified by the bar keeper as the time-piece stolen from him.

Dishau is a woodsman and has made his haunts about Woodruff for several years. He makes no denial of the charge against him and it is thought that he will express a desire to plead guilty and receive sentence.

He had his hearing before Judge Ames at Minocqua and was bound over to the spring term of circuit court with bonds fixed at two hundred dollars. The man is not considered a tough character but is a heavy drinker and was probably looking for a little easy money after he had squandered all of his hard earned wages on a long debauch.

DAMAGED BY FLAMES

Residence Owned By Miss Stella Strong Is Partly Destroyed

The residence at 725 Margaret St. owned by Miss Stella Strong and occupied by her and the Cronin family, was damaged to a considerable extent by fire late Monday forenoon.

The flames broke out in the second story of the house and spread rapidly thru the rooms and into the attic. The loss on the property and contents is placed at about $500 covered by insurance.

Live coals which had dropped from a store onto the floor caused the fire. Both companies of the Rhinelander fire department responded to the alarm and remained on the scene for nearly two hours. The men worked hard and succeeded in keeping the blaze confined to the upper portion of the building. The first floor was not damaged.

RESIDENTS GO SOUTH

A small colony of prominent Rhinelander people will spend the remainder of the winter in the "Sunny South." They are Dr. and Mrs. A. D. Daniels, Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Miller and daughter Anna, Mrs. J. O. Raymond, W. B. LaSelle and J. Segerstrom. They will make their headquarters at Biloxi, Miss., and some intend to take side trips to Florida, Cuba and the Isle of Pines. Mrs. Shelton will also go South within a short time. Mr. Miller will return after locating his family.

RAILS WERE SPIKED; ENGINEER KILLED

Neal McIntyre of Soo Line Victim of Train Wreckers—Two Men Arrested For Crime

In the wreck of a Soo line locomotive near Pembine, late Friday afternoon, Neal McIntyre, the engineer, was killed and the fireman and head brakeman injured. The engine was pulling an east bound freight train and jumped the track while rounding a curve. The engine toppled over on its side burying McIntyre beneath its weight. The other two occupants of the cab were in some manner thrown out landing on the ground, receiving many bruises.

All indications point to the fact that the wreck was deliberately caused by train wreckers who had placed spikes between the joints where the rails meet. Two foreigners are now being held at Pembine charged with the crime.

Just before the wreck occurred, the trainmen, who were in the caboose, claim that they noticed two men walking along the side of the track as the train passed. They were evil looking men and as the caboose went by them they turned and shook their fists at the crew. These men were going toward Pembine and were taken in custody upon their arrival there. While little can be learned in Rhinelander it is reported that these fellows are believed to be responsible for the wreck. Their object for the dastardly deed is not known except that they were endowed with a fiend's desire to commit crime. The men are foreigners and speak but little English.

The train was pounding along at a high speed when the big locomotive left the rails. The monster turned partly around and then fell completely on its side and McIntyre was pinned under the wreckage. The fireman and head brakeman were thrown a distance of thirty-five feet. Their injuries while painful are not considered serious and both will recover.

McIntyre's body, when removed from underneath the engine, was horribly crushed and scalded. It is the opinion that his death was instantaneous.

WELL KNOWN HERE

Neal McIntyre, the dead engineer, was well known and had a large number of friends in Rhinelander. His untimely death is sadly felt here and an all sides can be heard expressions of the deepest regret. His run was between Rhinelander and Gladstone, over the east end of the road. He was here several times a week. Mr. McIntyre is survived by a mother and sister who live at Gladstone.

SUSPECTS RELEASED

Late reports from Pembine state that the two men arrested on the charge of spiking the rails and causing the derailment of the Soo locomotive, have been released. The evidence against them was not sufficient to hold them for the crime. Detectives are diligently at work on the case and more arrests will probably be made soon.

TO START NEW TOWN

A new lumber town may be established on the Monico-Watersmeet branch of the Northwestern road.

The Escanaba Timber Land Company has sold to the William Bonifas Lumber Company 33,000 acres of timber lands for $425,000. The tract lies contiguous to the Northwestern lines near Watersmeet and is covered with a heavy growth of hemlock and hardwood. It is understood that the company will build a mill and start a town at some point near Watersmeet where the headquarters of the company may be located.

The William Bonifas Lumber Company is a newly organized corporation and the stock is held by William Bonifas of Garden and the Kimberly-Clark Company of Neenah.

BIG FIRE STORY FALSE

Last Saturday afternoon a report was circulated about this city to the effect that Minneapolis was being destroyed by fire. The rumor stated that the heart of the business district was in flames and blocks of buildings were being dynamited to prevent the conflagration from spreading. Upon telegraphing to that city it was learned that the story was untrue. The report probably got its foundation from the fact that St. Paul, that day, had a big fire at which the loss was six hundred thousand dollars.

FIRES NOT A BENEFIT

Were Not Blessing In Disguise But Instead Did Heavy Damage.

Reports are appearing in the press to the effect that the recent forest fires thruout this section and upper Michigan were really a blessing in disguise, and that they were the means of clearing much land thereby aiding the settler and incidentally stimulating the development of the region. The Northern Wisconsin correspondent to the Mississippi Valley Lumberman says that these reports are untrue. After talking to several of the farmers in Oneida county, all of whom passed thru the fires, The New North man has learned that the Lumberman correspondent is right in his assertions.

Intelligent farmers and experienced woodsmen say that the forest fires did nothing but damage. While some land has been cleared of brush, logs and stumps, farmers point to the fact that stacked hay has been destroyed, grass burned over, young and thrifty trees ruined, and much of the top soil burned out down to the underlying sand, and such lands will not recover their fertility or their timber for many years to come. The farmers of Oneida county are not at all anxious for the aid of forest fires in clearing land.

STORM PLAYS HAVOC WITH TIME SCHEDULE

All North Bound Northwestern Trains Late, Saturday—Blizzard Not Severe In This Section of State

One of the worst blizzards of the winter swept over the state Friday night and continued all during Saturday.

In this locality the storm was not as severe as in the southern part of the state and but little snow fell. A strong wind prevailed here and the mercury took a sudden drop from the balmy winter weather of the few days previous. At points south of Rhinelander and especially along the lakes, the storm was terrific and was the means of causing heavy damage. Train service over the Northwestern road from the south was practically at a stand still. Number 11, the north bound limited due in Rhinelander at 3:59 a. m. was unable to push its way thru the drifts and had to be abandoned. No. 17, the north bound afternoon passenger train due here at 1:37, did not arrive until about 7:30 that evening. On Sunday conditions were but little better and all north bound trains were several hours late. All trains from the north were exactly on time as the storm did not extend over that part of the country. On the Soo line, trains from the west were delayed.

Along the Northwestern road in the vicinity of Milwaukee the snow had drifted mountains high on the track and the blinding blizzard made it impossible for trains to proceed. Telegraph and telephone wires fell cutting off all communication with the outside world.

BURNED BY KEROSENE

Son of Hans Anderson Meets With Accident While Starting Fire

While starting a fire with kerosene last Sunday, Morris Anderson, son of Hans Anderson, was quite severely burned.

The boy had returned home late in the afternoon and finding the other members of the family gone, attempted to prepare his own supper. He placed kindling in the kitchen range, poured oil over the wood and then touched a match to the same. Without warning, the flame puffed up into his face. His cheeks and forehead were blistered and his eye brows and hair singed. Being alone in the house Morris did not summon a physician, but attempted to dress his own injuries. It was not until the arrival of the family, an hour later, that Dr. Packard was called.

The boy's burns while very painful are not serious. The accident might have been worse and should serve as a warning to people who are in a habit of using kerosene in lighting fires.

STILL AT LARGE

No clue has yet been obtained that would lead to the arrest of the two men who held up the saloon keeper at Heaford Junction. The police are of the opinion that the fellows are well out of the country and will never be caught.

Home-Made, Though Effective Medicine for Kidney Trouble

Here is a simple home-made mixture as given by an eminent authority on kidney diseases, who makes the statement that it will relieve almost any case of kidney trouble if taken before the stage of Bright's disease. He states that such symptoms as lame back, pain in the side, frequent desire to urinate, especially at night; painful and discolored urination, are readily overcome. Here is the recipe. Try it:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

These ingredients are all harmless and easily mixed at home by shaking well in a bottle. This mixture has a peculiar healing and soothing effect upon the entire kidney and urinary structure, and often overcomes the worst forms of rheumatism in just a little while. This mixture is said to remove all blood disorders and cure rheumatism by forcing the kidneys to filter and strain from the blood and system all uric acid and foul, decomposed waste matter, which cause these afflictions. Try it if you aren't well. Save the prescription.

FACTS ABOUT 1909

The year 1909 started on Friday and will end on Friday, but fortunately through its entire course there is but one instance where there is a combination of the double hoodoo, Friday and the 13th. This occurs in August.

The first legal holiday is February 12, Lincoln's birthday, which also falls on Friday. Washington's birthday is Monday, February 22. Valentine's day also comes on Sunday, February 14.

Easter Sunday falls on April 11, which is considerably earlier than last year, when the date was unusually late.

It probably will be a source of much regret to the small boy to learn that the Fourth of July falls on Sunday during the new year. However, in such case the day following will be observed.

Thanksgiving day is the last Thursday in November, and is the 25th day. Christmas, Dec. 25th, falls on Saturday. Halloween, Oct. 31, comes on Sunday and April Fool's day on Thursday.

GERMS IN HER SYSTEM

Every Woman Should Read This

The number of the diseases peculiar to woman is such that we believe that this space would hardly contain a mere mention of their names, and it is a fact that most of these diseases are of a catarrhal nature. A woman cannot be well if there is a trace of the catarrhal germs in her system.

Some women think there is no help for them. We positively declare this to be a mistaken idea. We are so sure of this that we offer to supply medicine absolutely free of all cost in every instance where it fails to give entire satisfaction or does not substantiate our claims. With this understanding, no woman should hesitate to believe our honesty of purpose, or hesitate to put our claims to a test.

There is only one way to cure Catarrh. That way is through the blood. You may use all the snuffs, douches or like remedies for years without getting more than temporary relief at best. Catarrh is caused by a germ. That germ is carried by the blood to the innermost part of the system, until the mucous membrane is broken, irritation and inflammation produced and a flow of mucous results, and you can probably realize how silly it is to attempt to cure such an ailment unless you take a medicine that follows the same course as the germ or parasite.

Resall Muc-Tone is scientifically prepared from the prescription of an eminent physician who for thirty years made his specialty Catarrh, and with this medicine he averaged 90 percent of cures where it was employed. No other remedy is so properly designed for the ailments of woman. It will purify and enrich the blood, stop mucous discharge, destroy all germ matter, remove all impurities from the system, soothe, heal and strengthen the mucous tissues, and bring about a good feeling of health and strength.

We want you to try Resall Muc-Tone on our guarantee. If you are not benefited, or for any reason not satisfied simply tell us and we will hand back your money. Resall Muc-Tone comes in two sizes, 50c. and $1.00.

A Common Cold

We claim that if catching cold could be avoided some of the most dangerous and fatal diseases would never be heard of. A cold often forms a culture bed for germs of infectious diseases. Consumption, pneumonia, diphtheria and scarlet fever, four of the most dangerous and fatal diseases, are of this class. The culture bed formed by the cold favors the development of the germs of these diseases, that would not otherwise find lodgment. There is little danger however of any of these diseases being contracted when a good expectorant cough medicine like Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is used. It cleans out these culture beds that favor the development of the germs of these diseases. That is why this remedy has proved so universally successful in preventing pneumonia. It not only cures your cold quickly, but minimizes the risk of contracting these dangerous diseases. For sale by F. L. Hinman & Co.

AFTER OFFENDERS

Two internal revenue officers have been in Ashland and vicinity for nearly two weeks endeavoring to apprehend violators of the United States liquor law, especially saloonkeepers who sell to Indians who have not allotments and are not citizens. They were at Okech recently looking into the actual character of the beverages sold there as cider and other soft drinks, and it is reported from there that one of the agents, while inspecting the stock in one of the stores, was ordered out by the proprietor and a scuffle ensued in which the agent hit the proprietor over the head with the butt end of a revolver.

HOME CURE FOR ECZEMA.

Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol, Glycerine, Etc., Used as a Simple Wash.

It really seems strange that so many people suffer year in and year out with eczema, when it is now no longer a secret that oil of wintergreen mixed with thymol, glycerine, etc., makes a wash that is bound to cure.

Old, obstinate cases, it is true, cannot be cured in a few days, but there is absolutely no sufferer from eczema who ever used this simple wash and did not find immediately that wonderfully soothing, calm, cool sensation that comes when the itch is taken away. Instantly upon applying a few drops of the wash the remedy takes effect, the itch is allayed. There is no need of experiment—the patient knows at once.

Instead of trying to compound the oil of wintergreen, thymol, glycerine, etc., in the right proportions ourselves we are using a prescription which is universally found the most effective. It is known as the D. D. D. Prescription, or Oil of Wintergreen Compound. It is made by the D. D. D. Co. of Chicago, and our long experience with this remedy has given us great confidence in its merits.

Uncle Isaac is further from winning the senatorial toxa than ever. He now has only sixty one votes, lacking five of a majority.
Why do not those representatives investigate the expenses of all candidates for the United States Senate at the primaries and if all four are in the same boat elect Stephenson and call it good? If Uncle Ike is the exception, elect another man in his stead. It is nonsense to say the primary will fall because a legislature insists on an investigation. The people who are decrying the primary law are those who did everything in their power to prevent its enactment into law in the first place. The old convention system better serves their ends.

WASHINGTON NEWS.
Washington, D. C.—It required just 150 minutes of the valuable time of the House of Representatives to pass the Post-office Appropriation Bill carrying $234,000,000. The discussion under this head occupies 21 pages of the Congressional Record. The woman who samples all the stores in town before she would expend $25 for a yard of $2.00 broadcloth or the farmer who dickers for months for a $20 horse and a little appreciates the freedom with which Congress expends their money. It is their money. The annual expenditures of our national government amount to about $10.00 per capita. In making this appropriation for the post office Congress was spending 2.50 for each man, woman and child in the country.

It is interesting to know just how Congress went about the matter of expending the money. Strange as it may seem the appropriating of $234,000,000 was not of enough importance to engage the attention of the House all of the short time devoted to its consideration.

The first essential to the putting through of a bill is to limit the debate. So when the bill was taken up Mr. Overstreet, chairman in charge of the bill reported in favor of a limitation of the debate to two and one half hours. Realizing the hopelessness of any contest to extend the time no member raised his voice to do so. Mr. Overstreet, republican, controlled half of the time and Mr. Moore, democrat, the other half. Each could occupy all of the time if he desired, but they graciously yielded to other members who desired to speak. A few of the extraneous matters discussed were: President Roosevelt, Senator Lodge, The House Rules, and Merchant Marine.

Incidentally the disposition of this important bill illustrates how the House Rules work and the great value of a "Point of Order." The fondest hopes of the members to accomplish something in the interest of the country often go a glimmering upon a point of order. One of the rules provides that new legislation shall not be enacted upon an appropriation bill. This is the rule, when appropriation bills are under consideration, which members endeavor to get around. The fact is that most of the important legislation of any session is secured by tacking it to some appropriation bill.

Mr. Madden of Illinois endeavored when the post-office appropriation bill was under consideration to do something in behalf of the clerks and employees of the postoffices throughout the country. He asked that they be given thirty days vacation annually as is given the employees of the departments in Washington. It fell foul of a point of order made by Mr. Overstreet, the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge. Mr. Bartholdt of Missouri desired to know why there was discrimination between employees of other departments and the overworked employees of the post-office service. Mr. Overstreet said the impression is erroneous "that the thirty days period of vacation granted at Washington was a statute which originally meant thirty days leave of absence with pay. It was a law to limit the wholesale manner in which heads of departments unnecessarily granted longer leaves of absence. The remedy would be to further limit the period of vacation of the employees of the departments rather than to enlarge the period of vacation to employees in the field." Mr. Overstreet was forced to admit that employees of the departments at Washington also have a thirty day sick leave.

Upon such an intelligent and highly elucidating explanation the chair sustained the point of order and the clerks in the postoffice service must continue to be satisfied with the same old fifteen days leave.

Mr. Olcott of New York endeavored to have the maximum pay of watchmen, messengers and laborers increased from $700 to $500 per year. Representative Stafford of Wisconsin made a point of order that it would change existing law. The point was sustained, so the watchmen, messengers and laborers were left without an increase.

An appropriation to pay the necessary expenses of railway mail clerks while actually travelling on the business of the department went down on a decision that it was out of order, which decision was sustained on appeal by a vote of 93 yeas to 24 nays. But a point of order was not raised against a similar provision for assistant superintendents. Political pull is required to become an assistant superintendent while a railway mail clerk gets his position upon his merits.

Mr. Hobson proposed an amendment to provide $20,000 for experimental parcels post. Mr. Overstreet was right after it with a point of order. Mr. Hobson renewed it so as to apply to the delivery of packages originating upon the same rural route. Again the point of order stabbed it as it did a number of other desirable features.

There are only one or two days in the year when legislation can be secured. These are when this bill is under consideration. If parcel posts which the express companies do not want or postal telegraphs which the Western Union monopoly does not want, or cheaper postage rates which the railroads do not want or any of the postal reforms which the people generally want they will some time be enacted as a rider to a postoffice appropriation bill.

People generally know reforms are slow to come but there is little knowledge as to how the rules are employed to prevent their accomplishment. Victor Muddock, Representative from Kansas and a member of the Committee on Postoffices and Post roads, speaking of this feature said:

"Under the present system the responsibility of the legislation is confined largely to the Speaker and his cabinet. The individual Member has very little that is vital to do, with it; and under the present rule and practices of the House he cannot have and yet the matter of appropriation should be the concern of all. The chairman of the committee reporting a bill is the special champion of the reported measure. He combats amendment and he is usually able to defeat amendment. It is therefore of prime importance to the mover of an amendment that he win over not the House but the chairman for the chairman will deliver a majority of the House. The chairman are loyal to the Speaker. His request is powerful. Therefore the member who desired the chairman's favor of an amendment, if it is refused, has no appeal. The appeal is not to the House. It is to the speaker. We pay fifty thousand dollars a year, by statute to carry mails across the Eads Bridge, St. Louis. If we paid for this service at regular rates for weight and space the cost would be about fifteen thousand dollars a year. Suppose I attempt to change this law by amendment on the postal appropriation bill. A point of order would defeat it.

THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE

Public Reading of Drama to be Given by Walton Prye
Mr. Walton Prye will give a public reading of "The Servant in the House" under the auspices of the Woman's Club February 18th at the Congregational church. This reading will doubtless interest more of the Rhinelander people than any other attraction of the whole season.
"The Servant in the House" is a drama recently written by Charles Mann Kennedy. It is a remarkable play; many critics regard it as the strongest play that has been written for many years. Some critics predict that it will take its place along side of Pilgrim's Progress and live to be read a century hence. This is saying a great deal for a play. Many dramas are merely interesting when played on the stage; they are not interesting when read. Elizabeth Luther Cary reviewing the play in The Atlantic Monthly says, "When a drama succeeds in appealing to both sight and hearing without sacrificing its importance for the reflective mind, we must recognize in it a work of true dramatic art."
When I finished reading the play a few months ago it seemed to me that I had ever read. Greater books I have read but none that seemed to penetrate my soul and reach the deeper impulses and stir them as did The Servant in the House. On the stage it had a run far surpassing that of Ben Hur several years ago. And as a play it is stronger by far than Ben Hur. A few weeks ago I heard a traveling man who had witnessed the play at Chicago say that the great assemblage present utterly went into raptures over it. And what is more, the drama has the remarkable quality of interesting all classes of people. We predict a great treat in store for the people of Rhinelander. The reader is an artist with a national reputation. The Woman's Club is to be congratulated in an undertaking so worthy. I have been requested to give a brief synopsis of the drama for publication next week.

BACHELOR JOHN
By Edgar Walton Cooley.

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

His face streaked with perspiration and grime, Bachelor John wearily climbed the hill to his shanty. Opening the door, he paused to take a letter out of the mail box. It was addressed in a strange hand, and printed on one corner of the envelope were the words, "Wilbur Haines, M. D., Cripple Creek."

Removing his greasy hat, Bachelor John sat on the doorstep and opened the letter. It was a brief note, brusquely informing him that his only brother, Abner, had died suddenly, as the result of an accident.

The intelligence caused Bachelor John's hand to tremble, and a small slip of paper dropped from the envelope. On this was a message written in pencil in Abner's hand, which ran: Dear John: You have been a good brother to me, and I want you to have Baby Grace. I have signed the papers and Lawyer Mackey, here, will give them to you. Good-by, Brother John.
Bachelor John's eyes grew misty. It was the first time Abner had shown any affection for him. Abner had been the baby. He was ten years younger than John, and throughout the years of their boyhood John had been compelled to give up to him in everything. In after years, their parents dead, John had endeavored to be a father to Abner. He had provided for his every need, and when Abner won the heart of the girl John had loved in secret, he had closed his teeth upon his anguish, and had impoverished himself to help Abner get a start in life.

After Abner went to the gold fields, John had not heard from him often. He knew she had died, and that there had been a baby girl. But somehow, he could not remember how, he had not the impression that the child had died also. It would be about three—no, it must be fully four years old now.

Bachelor John glanced around his two barren rooms. He had been unable to profit by opportunities. Until middle age, he had worked unceasingly and uncomplainingly for Abner and Her. This was his home—a dreary place for a baby girl. And how could he leave her alone while he was at work?

"It was Abner's wish," he said. "I will fix it somehow."
That night the clock struck 12 while Bachelor John was leaning over the table gazing at a faded photograph of a young woman.

"If the baby looks like her," he said, as he lay on the bed staring at the darkness, "I will love—love it!"
To the gold fields was a far journey for Bachelor John, but at last he stood in Lawyer Mackey's office.
"Your brother," said the attorney, "left neither wife nor child. He was killed by the caving in of a tunnel in his mine, the 'Baby Grace.' This cave-in uncovered one of the richest veins in Cripple Creek, and this he has bequeathed to you. It will make you a millionaire."

Bachelor John made no reply. In silence he took the papers and passed slowly out into the Colorado sunshine, and upon his face was the shadow of a great disappointment.

Shifting the Blame.

According to all accounts the Cameron Highlanders militia are a fine body of men physically. Not long ago four of them occupied the least crowded seat in a full compartment on a Scotland railway. Just as the train was moving off a diminutive little clergyman jumped into the compartment, and tried to edge himself between two of the Highlanders. Not finding it very comfortable, he turned to the one on his right, and said: "Sit up, please. You know that according to act of parliament this seat holds five." The Highlander looked at him for a moment, and then replied: "That may be a' right enough for your kind, sir, but shairly ye canna' blame me for no'tein' constructed according to act of parliament!"

"I highly recommend it to all who are sick, and I am glad to add my endorsement to that of others."

OLD "HOSS" RUNS AWAY

The good old horse that for years has rendered faithful service on the T. C. Wood Hardware Company's delivery wagon, acquired sufficient activity to "run away," Saturday morning, although those who witnessed the performance say that the animal did not travel at a swifter gate than a dog trot.

George Fenning, the driver, never thinks of hitching the steed when he has occasion to leave the wagon, and this is what caused the trouble. The poor beast took it into his head to depart from the front of the hardware store and started up Davenport St., but soon became exhausted and sought rest in a nearby stable.

George saw the horse start and gave chase. Eye witnesses say that the speed that George developed would make him a fit candidate for the Marathon races along with Longboat and Dorando.

George will make an effort to find a place for the horse in the Rhinelander fire department. An equine with such remarkable swift action is fit for something better than a place on a common delivery cart.

The New Mayor
Based on G.H. Broadhurst's Successful Play

THE MAN OF THE HOUR

BY
PAYSON
COPYRIGHT, 1907 BY
GEORGE H. BROADHURST

With all the advantages of youth, education and good looks and no vocation other than the enjoyment of wealth, the hero of our present story chose rather to sacrifice his case and comfort on the altar of his duty as a citizen. His city called him to save her from spoliation and corruption, and he responded to the call. To lure him from the path of right came the seductions of love and the claims of a revered parent's memory, allied with the mighty forces at the command of political and financial malefactors. The firmness with which "the man of the hour," singled out for the highest post in a great municipality by those who saw in him only a weakling and a tool, resisted the very forces that had elevated him for their own purposes to official power will be an inspiration to the reader, as it has been an uplifting force in the minds of thousands who have witnessed its theatrical representation.

CHAPTER III.

HORRIGAN was first to break the tense silence. "What's this here for?" he growled, indicating Phelan with a contemptuous jerk of the head and addressing no one in particular. "Ask your friend Wainwright," growled Phelan, with equal roughness. "I—you see," began Wainwright, hesitatingly. "I don't like to see two such first-rate claps at odds with each other, so I wanted to bring you to gether here to—"

"Oh, you did, did you?" sneered Horrigan. "And what did Phelan say to that little play?"

"I said," snapped Phelan before his host could reply—"I said I'd see you in—"

"Same here, twice over!" said Horrigan.

"What?" interrupted Wainwright, curiously. "Is there no way?"

"No," returned Horrigan, his deep voice rumbling far down in his throat. "There isn't. Look here, Phelan! I'm out for your scalp, and I'm going to get it!"

"Come on, look for it!" growled Phelan, fairly hopping up and down in rage and excitement. "Come a-runnin'! An' while you're bounin' my scalp don't overlook one let. I'm after yours!"

"What, you little shrimp? Why?"

"Yes, yours, Horrigan. You can't see your own shadow in the mirror, but you're a little statue of Liberty. You can't turn down, and here's the man who's going to do the turning. Me—Alwyn Bennett, Jimmy Phelan of the District!"

"Let it go at that for now. You'd wake up in the fall, when the election—"

"Let it go at that for keeps, I—"

"Mr. Wainwright," broke off Horrigan. "If this was the business you wanted to talk over with me here—"

"It isn't," asserted the thoroughly confident Phelan.

"Oh! Then we can get down to real business perhaps when this fellow's gone?"

"That lets me out," observed Phelan cheerfully as he picked up his hat. "G'by, Mr. Wainwright. G'by, Mr. Horrigan. I'm off!"

"But you'll stay to lunch, Alwyn. Won't you?" urged Horrigan, with an effort at cordiality that deceived no one.

"No, thanks," replied Phelan. "When the curtains down and the orchestra's gone home I don't need no usher to poke me in the ribs to tell me the show's out. As for stayin' to break bread with Dick Horrigan, I'd sooner have a 100 little grub fest with Wiley's poison squad. Goodby, Al. Horrigan, as for you, come day I'll cross two sticks of dynamite under you and you'll scatter so wide that the inquest over your pitiful remains will have to be held in fourteen counties!"

"I am so sorry, Mr. Horrigan, that this should have happened in my house," said Wainwright as the late alderman stalked out, leaving the boss staring after him in dumb fury. "I meant it for the best and—"

"Mr. Wainwright," interrupted Horrigan, venting his pent-up wrath on his dismayed host, "this old world of ours is white with bones of failures, of fools, of deadbeats. In other words, of folks who 'meant it for the best.' Now let's get down to business."

"First let me introduce Mr. Gibbs."

"Glad to meet him, but he'll excuse me when I say I never talk business when there's a third party around. No offense, Mr. Gibbs. Just walk out and take a look at the view, like a good boy, won't you? Thanks."

Gibbs, at a warning look of appeal from Wainwright, checked the angry retort that sprang to his lips, turned on his heel and walked out. Horrigan, who had observed the glance exchanged between the two men, gradually attempted to soften the effect of his brusqueness.

"I didn't mean to snub your friend," said he, "but Phelan riled me, and I took it out on the next man I spoke to. What on earth set you to having Phelan here to meet me for, anyway?"

"Just as I said. I wanted to win him over to us. We will need every strong man we can get this fall. We—"

"You know a lot about finance, Mr. Wainwright. But you're a rank outsider in politics or you'd never have made such a break. I can't compromise with Phelan even if I wanted to. He's stood out against me, and I've got to smash him. If he could defy me and get away with it, other leaders would think they could do it, too, and in less than no time the organization would be split up into a dozen factions, and I'd be down and out. Understand? I've got to look out for discipline if I'm to hold the place I've won. When a man in the organization starts a fight against me, I must down him. There's no turning back. That's why I'm boss. Every man in the crowd knows he's got to obey me or fight me and that if it's fight it's a battle to the death. And he's the man who does the dying, not I. Now, you understand? So we can get to business. What?"

But business seemed this morning fated to many interruptions. The latest came in the form of Judge Newman, who, bustling into the room with all his customary pompous dignity, suddenly stopped in his tracks and walked at sight of the boss.

"Good morning, Mr. Horrigan," said the judge, hesitatingly, wringing under the boss's glower. "I hope I'm not here too early and that Mr. Wainwright has intervened for—"

"For your recommendation?" queried Horrigan, speaking as though to a disgraced servant. "If that's what you're here for you might have spared yourself the trouble. What I told you before still goes."

"But, Mr. Horrigan, consider how long I've been on the bench, and—"

"And it's time you got your nose out of the feed bin and gave some one else a chance, you are?"

"I'm growing old, Mr. Horrigan," pleaded the thoroughly cowed judge. "How can I go back to law practice and compete with younger men? Besides, Mrs. Newman declares—"

"I can't help that," returned Horrigan, quite unmoved. "You've had your share. We've got to look out for our own active workers—for the men we can count on to do the right thing."

"But, Mr. Horrigan," protested the judge, "I always try to do what is right."

"I said the right thing," corrected the boss. "Not the difference?"

"Excuse me, judge," interrupted Wainwright. "If you'll leave this matter in my hands, I will try to convince Mr. Horrigan of your fitness. Just leave it all to me."

"Oh, thank you so much, Charles," cried the relieved judge. "I'm sure I can count on you. Mrs. Newman will be so grateful. Well, I won't detain you any longer. Goodby."

"Goodby, judge," answered Wainwright tolerantly.

"Goodby, Mr. Horrigan," went on Judge Newman, with effusion.

A guest from Horrigan, who had turned his back on the visitor, was the only reply, and the judge departed to bear the message of hope to Mrs. Newman.

"Have you any special objections to Newman?" asked Wainwright.

"No," said Horrigan, "except I think perhaps there's men who can do better."

Again, venting his pent-up wrath on his dismayed host, "this old world of ours is white with bones of failures, of fools, of deadbeats. In other words, of folks who 'meant it for the best.' Now let's get down to business."

"First let me introduce Mr. Gibbs."

"Have you any special objections to Newman?" asked Wainwright.

"No," said Horrigan, "except I think perhaps there's men who can do better."

"Oh, if it is a favor to you, all right. But it doesn't do those judiciary fellows any harm to keep them guessing awhile. It times 'em and teaches 'em to mind—sort of keeps them in their places, you know. And now won't you tell that butter of yours not to let us be disturbed?"

Wainwright complied, and the two settled down to their deferred talk.

"How about the election this fall?" began the financier.

"We're already growling; but just between you and me, it's going to be a hot fight. The people at large seem to be a little sore on the organization. A few deals lately have been a little raw, and some of the papers are kicking. Good Lord! If it wasn't for the newspapers what a clench a boss would have in running a city! It'd be like taking pennies from a baby's bank. But—"

"Then you think there is some doubt about the election?"

"I wouldn't go so far as that. It'll be a tussle, but with plenty of cash and the right man for mayor—mark me, I say—and the right man—we ought to win."

"The woods are full of 'right men,'" replied Wainwright. "The money is the chief thing to consider. That is why I asked you here today. This is the point I'm getting at: As soon as election is safely over the Borough Street railway will apply for a franchise for a car line from Blank avenue to Dash street along the river front."

"I see," nodded Horrigan. "And, as you own the City Surface line and as that is the Borough Street railway's worst rival, you want the Borough's franchise bill killed when it comes before the board of aldermen?"

"You're wrong. To paraphrase your own words, you know a lot about politics. I want the Borough Street railway's franchise granted, and I want the franchise to be perpetual."

"But I don't see what your driving at. If you intend to merge the Borough Street railway with your own City Surface line its charter will become void."

"I don't mean to merge them. I own both roads, and I run them separately."

"The — you do?"

"That's a little surprise, eh? I haven't made any parade of it. I just went quietly to work, through Gibbs, and bought up a majority of the Borough stock. Now don't you see how the granting of the franchise and the news that I control the road will work when they are made known?"

"Sure! I'll send that stock sky high. You'll scoop in a million or two."

"A million or two?" echoed Wainwright scornfully. "Nearer—"

"Hold on!" interrupted Horrigan. "What's that noise?"

He had jumped to his feet with an alacrity that was surprising in so large a man and was listening intently.

"That clicking?" asked Wainwright. "Oh, that's only the private wire in my office."

"Private wire? Any operator?"

"Of course. Why?"

"Suppose he should happen to be listening to us?"

"Who? Thompson? Absurd!"

"I don't know. I'd rather—"

"Nonsense. It's Thompson, my private secretary, a man who's been with me nine years. I trust him as—"

"But I don't. I don't trust anybody. Send him into some other room."

"I can't. In his absence some important message might come, and if he wasn't there on the very moment to transmit it to me I might lose thousands. He's all right if ever a man was. I trust him implicitly."

"Oh, all right, then. Go on with what you were saying."

"I want the Borough Street railway franchise made perpetual. Catch my drift?"

"Sure. But the papers and the property holders will make a big kick."

concern me?"

Horrigan threw himself back in his chair, upturned clear in one corner of his mouth, thumbs in waistcoat armholes and eyed his host quizzically. Wainwright did not even pretend not to understand. Still, instead of giving a direct answer he went on with seeming irrelevance:

"I am a public spirited citizen. I believe civic welfare would suffer by any change in municipal administration, so to keep the present party in power I am willing to donate to it $200,000 toward election expenses."

"That sounds pretty good as far as it goes, but maybe you didn't hear something I asked you a minute ago. What I want to know is, How does all this concern me?"

"I'm coming to that. As I said, I am a public spirited citizen. I'm also a good friend—such a good friend that I'm always glad to put my friends on to anything in the market that looks particularly promising. Suppose I carry for your account at the market price (that's $3 just now) 15,000 shares of Borough Street railway stock?"

"Well?"

"If that franchise is granted, Borough stock will go up at least 25 points within two days. That would clear up for you a profit of—let's see—about $375,000."

Horrigan had pulled a pencil from his pocket and was figuring on the back of an envelope.

"Yes," he said at last; "that's right, $375,000. That would be my profit while yours would run into the millions. That's not warm enough friendship for me?"

"Surely, that is a generous—"

"Generous, maybe, but I'd like something magnificent—say 25,000 shares at $3. Then at the 25 point jump I'd make—I'd make—consulting his figures on the envelope—"something over $900,000. That sounds better to me. Hey?"

"But Mr. Horrigan—"

"You've got my terms. Take 'em or leave 'em."

"Oh, very well," conceded Wainwright, with lame graciousness. "Anything to oblige an old friend."

"Good! So we get $200,000 for election expenses, and my personal account receives 25,000 shares at $3."

"Quite so. And now—"

"And now comes the question of the right man for mayor. We—"

Again Horrigan paused, rising to his feet stealthily, like some ponderous cat, his head bent slightly, as though catching a faint or distant sound.

"What's the matter?" asked Wainwright, looking up.

"Nothing," returned Horrigan. But he did not resume his seat. Instead as he talked he began to pace the room in apparent aimlessness, yet every turn seemed to bring him nearer and nearer to the door of the adjoining office.

"You see," he said, "we must have the right man. If we don't, we haven't a shadow of a show to win. We must be careful to choose the best man possible. In fact, Mr. Wainwright—in fact—"

His wanderings had brought him to the office door. With the last word he suddenly jerked it open.

Thompson stepped quietly over the threshold into the library, walked over to his employer, handed him a dispatch and went out again under the battery of Horrigan's glare, closing the office door after him.

"That fellow was listening to every word we said," shouted the boss as the door shut behind Thompson.

"How foolish you are!" protested Wainwright. "He was bringing me this message. I've tried and tempted and tested Thompson in a hundred ways, and he's always rung true. I trust him utterly."

"Well, I don't trust a man living," retorted Horrigan, reluctantly convinced. "I don't sign receipts or keep accounts or write letters or have witnesses when I talk. I always make it a question of veracity between me and the other man if there's an investigation. My word's as good as any one's, and they can't prove anything against me in case of a showdown. I advise you to try the same plan. It's a good one. And in the meantime if I were you I'd keep an eye on that secretary."

"Never mind about Thompson. He's all right. Let's get back to the election. Who have you in mind for mayor?"

"Well," considered Horrigan, "he's got to be some one who isn't mixed up in politics or corporations. Some one the public isn't on to. A man with no queer past."

"I advise you to consult the calendar of saints and pick out your candidate there," sneered Wainwright, who could not clearly follow his guest's reasoning.

"No. I think I can find him on earth," laughed Horrigan. "He's got to be young, clever, educated, with a good name, a good family and social standing and plenty of cash. The cash is important, so the public will understand he isn't a graft hunter. They've got to be made to think he's in the game for purity of politics and high principles and love of civic duty and all that sort of thing. At the same time he's got to be some one we can handle to suit ourselves. That's the man who'll catch 'em coming and going. We've got to find him. Any suggestions?"

"Well, how about Gibbs?"

"Won't do. Broker and money juggler. The public wouldn't stand for him."

"Young Sawyer?"

"Sawyer was born foolish, and he's been getting steadily sillier every year since, and his face shows it."

"Ten Broeck, then."

"Ten Broeck is too fond of turning a cigarette into the connecting link between fire and a fool. And, besides, he wears a monocle. What'd happen if he was to flash that monocle in a Fourth ward meeting? There'd be a massacre."

"Well, who, then? Have you any one in mind?"

"Yes," assented Horrigan. "I have. Do you happen to know a young fellow who spends his summers near here—a chap named Bennett—Alwyn Bennett?"

"Certainly; I know him well. But—"

"Well, how does he strike you?"

"I'd never have thought of him in such a connection."

"Why wouldn't you? He pretty near fulfills all our qualifications. Besides, his father used to be a big man in the organization. Got some fat contracts from it in his time too."

"But young Bennett has never—"

"He's well off, well educated, clever, and all that. I ran across him last fall when he came over to help Lorimer in his fight in the Fourteenth. He made some rattling good speeches, and the boys all took a liking to him. A swell, but not a snob; good mixer, good fellow, popular, clear headed, no past—yes, he's our man. More I think it over the surer I am."

"I shouldn't wonder if you're right. How would you like to talk it over with him now?"

"Now?"

"Yes. He's still around the place somewhere, I think."

Wainwright rang a bell, and the butler appeared.

"Find Mr. Bennett," said the financier, "and ask him if he will step here for a moment."

"Yes," went on Horrigan reflectively, rubbing his huge plump hands together. "He's the man for us—that is," he added, with less assurance, "if we can handle him."

"I think we can," answered Wainwright, a fragment of his conversation with Gibbs flashing across his memory. "You see, I have fairly good reasons for believing he's in love with my niece, Miss Dallas Wainwright."

"So? That's—"

"And, as I control her fortune and her brother's until Perry is twenty-five—"

"Oh, it's a clench!" chuckled Horrigan. "He—"

"Mr. Bennett is playing tennis," reported the butler, coming to the door. "He will be here at once."

"Now," resumed Horrigan, "the only thing that remains is to find out if he'll consent, and then—"

"You wanted me, Mr. Wainwright?" asked Bennett, stepping through the long window from the veranda. "Oh, good morning, Mr. Horrigan," he added on seeing the second occupant of the room.

The young man was careless and colorless, his stiff shirt being turned in at the neck. In one hand he swung a tennis racket. With the other he mopped his flushed face, for the day was hot and the game had been swift.

"Yes," answered Wainwright. "I'm sorry to interrupt your tennis set, but we want to see you on a rather important matter. We've been talking about you."

"Thanks," said Bennett, with a puzzled smile from one to the other of the two older men. "What about?"

"Want to be mayor?" queried Horrigan abruptly.

"What's the answer?" countered the perplexed youth.

"It isn't a joke," intervened Wainwright. "Mr. Horrigan is in earnest."

"In earnest? I hope the heat hasn't gone to his head."

"You don't understand," put in Horrigan. "I control the party's nominations. The nomination for mayor is yours if you'll like it."

"Not—not really?" gasped Alwyn against.

"Yes, really. We—"

"But, with a whole organization full of good material, why do you come to me?"

"Because you're the man we want."

"As an answer that's excellent, but as an explanation it's mystifying."

"I'll tell you. We're looking forward to a risky fight and—"

"And since you see no chance of winning you pick me out as the victim instead of some organization man? Good idea as far as you're concerned, but I beg to decline, without thanks."

"No, no," corrected Wainwright. "Mr. Horrigan thinks that you have a strong chance of winning."

"That's right," corroborated the boss. "It'll be a hard fight, but with the right man we'll win, and we believe you're the right man. Even if you lose, you'll show the world what you're made of. Folks admire a fighter. They haven't much use for an idler."

The coarsely spoken words brought back with a rush Dallas Wainwright's plea and his own yearning to do something to make her proud of him—to win her by great deeds—to prove his love worth her acceptance. Was this the chance—the chance he had so eagerly longed for? It seemed providential. His face alight with the joy of battle and the hope of his heart's reward, Bennett turned upon the waiting boss.

"I accept."

"Good!" yelled Horrigan, slapping him resoundingly on the back. "Good boy! Now, we'll—"

"But remember one thing," Mr. Horrigan, interrupted Bennett, and his careless boyhood seemed to have fallen away from him like a discarded garment, leaving—

ing the manhood and rugged strength stripped of all the follies and silliness that had hitherto masked it. "Remember one thing, if I win this fight—if I am elected mayor—I shall never once swerve from my solemn oath of office. I—"

Wainwright, uneasy at the candidate's unwonted words and manner, started to speak, but Horrigan deftly interfered.

"Of course you'll keep your oath of office," he bellowed jocularly. "Of course you will. That's understood."

Then in an undertone to Wainwright as Alwyn moved away the boss whispered:

"Don't butt in! Leave him to me! That silly reform talk don't mean anything. It's the way all youngsters in politics blow off steam. Leave him to me!"

CHAPTER IV.

THE next few months were a period of unprecedented toil and excitement for Alwyn Bennett. He sometimes wondered at his own eloquence. Speech after speech he made in every section of the city—in half built suburbs, in halls where nine-tenths of his hearers were in evening dress and where familiar faces dotted the place; in overcrowded, smoke reeking auditoriums, where not one man in three wore a collar and where a score of nationalities vied for precedence.

With a versatility that delighted Horrigan the candidate managed to adapt himself to every audience and, moreover, to impress his hearers with a sense of his absolute sincerity and honesty. In the crowded, polyglot meetings he hit on the plan of speaking to representatives of each race in their own language. In a single evening, so the papers recorded, he had

LIBRARY NOTES.

One of the most gratifying features of the month's work has been the marked increase in the number of adult borrowers. The total circulation in this department being 1281. The children read 1200 books—the teachers used 64 books and 47 pictures. "The servant in the house has an unabating popularity, as has "New worlds for old." In fiction The Harrier, The trail of the lonesome pine King spruce and Friendship village, lead.

It is said that "to travel is to live." Of late there seems to be an exodus of Rhinelander people to different points in the south and west. If you are not one of them you can do the next best thing—read about places you wish to visit. You can wander around in California in James' In and about old missions. You can go to New Orleans in "Highways and byways of the Mississippi. You can go to the Yosemite and the Yellowstone in "Our national parks." You can take a most delightful trip west in Davis "The west from a car window and fields" Our western archipelago.

If you care to go abroad Among English hedgerows which tells of saunterings through the rural districts of England, or Our English cousins, which tells of the Derby and London life.

Read of French country life in Along French byways. Of Paris in "About Paris." "German life in town and country discusses institutions, habits and problems of our German neighbors "Gondola days and Venice are two illustrated books concerning that curious city. If you wish to go to Holland the book "Dutch life in town and country" gives a very clear picture of the life in that quaint country. In short, the department of your library is very well equipped and from it you can derive many of the pleasures and benefits of the traveller.

For the next three or four weeks talks on travel in Europe will be given to the pupils of the 5th grades, in the lecture room of the library. These talks will be illustrated by stereopticon views. The first will be Germany and will be given by Mr. Luther Brown, Saturday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock.

So far the story hour is proving very interesting to the 2d and 4th grade pupils. It is given every Saturday morning. The subject still continues to be "The adventures of Ulysses."

Mrs. Katherine Hahn of the Wisconsin library school will assist in the library during February.

Miss Hazeltime, preceptor of the library school will address the Woman's Club the 16th and Mr. Henry Flegler will speak to them and to the High School pupils in March.

OF INTEREST TO THE FARMER

Bulletin Tells How to Grow Clover On Jack-Pine Lands

The Bureau of Plant and Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture has recently issued a Farmer's Bulletin on how to grow clover for forage and seed on the sandy jack-pine lands of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The bulletin tells how these lands ought to be handled for best results. Jack-pine lands are different from other lands and require special care to make them productive. The author of the bulletin searched for farmers in northern Michigan, parts of Wisconsin and Minnesota, who have unusual success on these lands, and it is the methods that these practical farmers have tried and found successful that are described.

Jack-pine lands can be farmed profitably if they are handled right; when not handled right farming on them is a failure. Particular attention is given in the bulletin to farming clover and the handling of this crop for seed. The vital fact in farming these lands is that clover will grow on them if the crop is handled right. The seed yields of clover, particularly mammoth clover on these lands is surprisingly good, some years returning twenty to forty dollars an acre.

The bulletin suggests the best practices for securing a crop of seed every year and tells how to secure a stand of clover when the usual methods fails. Matters emphasized are: Plow all the brakes, ferns and wild grasses under without burning off; do all new breaking in July and early August; plow shallow, 3 to 4 inches deep; use the roller to firm the soil and get a better stand of clover and the spike-tooth harrow to leave the top soil loose and rough to retain soil moisture.

The bulletin is entitled, Clover Farming on the Sandy Jack-pine Lands of the North." It can be had free upon request to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., or to U. S. Representatives and Senators. Farmers on light sandy lands as well as those growing clover for seed in northern Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota will find many useful suggestions in the bulletin.

FEEBLE OLD LADY Has Strength Restored By Vinol

Mrs. Michael Bloom of Lewistown, Pa., who is 80 years of age, says: "For a long time I have been so feeble that I have had to be wheeled around in an invalid's chair. I had no strength and took cold at the slightest provocation, which invariably settled on my lungs, and a cough would result. My son learned of the cod liver preparation called Vinol, and procured a bottle for me. It built up my strength rapidly, and after taking three bottles I am able to do most of my work, and I can walk a quarter of a mile easily. Every aged or weak person who requires strength should try Vinol. I am delighted with what it has done for me."

As a body builder and strength creator for old people, delicate children, weak, run-down persons, and after sickness, Vinol is unexcelled. If it fails to give satisfaction we will return your money.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A BUREAU

By L. P. McCauley.

(Copyright, by Ford Pub. Co.)

I am only an ancient mahogany chest of drawers, massive, and of ornate workmanship. That I am unusually handsome there can be no doubt, for whenever a new acquaintance is ushered into my presence I hear such exclamations as: "Oh, how beautiful!" "What an exquisite old thing!" and they gaze with delight at the elaborately carved pillars which surmount my wonderful claw feet, and touch with an awed tenderness the shining glass knobs which ornament my highly polished front.

That I am old, is equally true! I cannot tell how old—some of the earlier events of my life are not quite clear, but what I chiefly recollect is the happy time spent with my beautiful young mistress. How well I remember her the day I first saw her! She had been away at a finishing school, and returned on a glorious summer afternoon. Through the windows in her pretty bedroom, in which I stood, the soft breeze lifted the muslin curtains, and stirred a fragrant breath among the roses which clustered about the room and offered sweet welcome to the home-coming of this lovely girl. I had heard the sound of carriage wheels upon the gravel drive, then affectionate greetings at the door, and before long light feet tripping up the stairs. A bewildering creature of light and life entered the room. Throwing her wide-brimmed hat upon the bed, she approached the corner where I stood and peeped, for an instant, into the quaint mirror which hung above me. Ah, never did mirror reflect a fairer vision of girlish loveliness!

A face of perfect oval framed by floating masses of soft brown curls; and 'neath delicately arched brows, a pair of innocent blue eyes looked forth.

The happy years passed all too swiftly, and I grew to love her more and more. Her being seemed almost a part of mine. I shared her sweet secrets, and though she did not tell me what those delicately tinted notes contained, I knew them almost word for word. She would read them again and again, sometimes kissing them, as young girls will, and I felt I had a sacred mission to care for those treasures so tenderly prized by her. She had lovers, many of them, and I believe I knew almost as soon as she which one she would accept.

With what keen delight I watched her make ready for her bridal, and as the beautiful gowns of rich brocade and shimmering gauze and silk were carefully consigned to my capacious depths, and the dainty articles of feminine lingerie, many of them fashioned by her own fair fingers, I was happy to protect.

All too swiftly sped the blissful months; the joyous girl was now a happy wife, and I still shared her secrets. Into her lovely face, once so gay and glad, had crept a thoughtful, gentle expression, and her slender hands were often busy now shaping tiny, wonderful garments, and as she bent over her work, there was an expression in the blue eyes that was almost divine. How sweet she looked, as with an air of shy mystery, she would lead her husband to my side and show him how the store of little garments was increasing! How the two would talk and plan together for the future of this Wonderful Being, who was coming to make gladder and fuller their wedding happiness. But such bliss was denied this loving pair. Her tender breast never knew the touch of baby fingers, nor her brow the crown of motherhood, for she slept beneath the early violets.

Life was very different for me after she died. The room where she and I dwelt so happily was closed for a long time, and the key was but seldom turned in the lock of "Letty's chest." I was regarded as a thing too sacred to be approached carelessly.

Years passed, and a troupe of young nieces made the old house ring with life again. To them "Aunt Letty" was only a name, for she, the eldest in a large family, had passed from earth many years before their advent, and the old chest of drawers and the moss-grown tomb in the old-fashioned garden were objects closely allied, and awe inspiring. As the years went on some of the older girls were allowed, as a special reward of merit, to take a peep into my sacred depths, and their eyes would open wide with wonder as a faded robe of quaint design, the wedding gown perchance, was shaken from its folds of yellowed tissue paper before their delighted gaze. The custodian of these hallowed treasures was a devoted sister, and at her death she bequeathed me to a niece, one of the wondering band of young sisters, and a namesake of the lovely woman who died long ere this Letty lived. And now, in her cheery room, I live again. The face reflected in my mirror's depths is not fair, as was the other Letty's, and is no longer in the flush of youth. The features are irregular, and in the brown hair is a generous sprinkling of gray, but the tenderness with which she guards me from injury makes me love her dearly. Sometimes she tenderly lifts in loving arms a tiny niece, and a beautiful baby face smiles above me, the blue eyes not unlike the ones I knew long years ago. "This shall be yours some day, my darling," she tells the smiling cherub. So, in the years to come, I may yet again share in the joys and sorrows that make up a maiden's life—who knows?
